This property is a two-story, c. 1880-1900 frame building which is reputed to be a former general store. The building is composed of vertical and horizontal weatherboards and has several windows, all of which have been boarded over. The building rests on a stone pier foundation and has a centered double-door entry. On the front of the building, the piers have been whitewashed to match the building, and a wood "skirt" of vertical boards has been tacked up between the bottom of the building and the ground. On the far left side of the façade, a sliding door has been installed. The building has a front-gabled standing-seam metal roof and little exterior ornamentation.
